SYNOPSIS
(NOT FOR PUBLICATION)

Jimmy and in their married career and, to the surprise of their friends, madly in love with each other. Such a state of affairs is unhea in their set. During the course of the anniversary celebration becomes ill and she admits to Jimmy that a visit from the stork i ing. This is also an unheard of state of affairs in the circle in they move, and to maintain their position it is decided that Chadye go to Europe immediately.

Frances Melrose, a fascinating butterfly girl, has often ca covetous eyes upon Jimmy, to the rage of her suitor, Eugene Magnin.
Upon Chadyeane's departure Frances sets out in earnest to capture Jimm but he is true to love for his wife. In the meantime a friend has writ ten to Chadyeane in Europe, hinting at a serious affair between Jimmy and Francis.

When Chadyeane returns with her boy, Bugsy, she finds Frances' clothing in her boudoir, and although the servants informed her that Frances had merely changed her clothing there for a ride, her suspicions are aroused. Other incriminating evidence confirms her belief that Jimmy is deeply in love with the interloper, and she retaliates by allowing Jack LeMoyne, a former suitor, to pay attentions to her. It is not long before Jimmy and Chadyeane are bitter towards each other and a divorce appears imminent.

Jimmy has given a power of attorney to Magnin, on the plea of the latter that he can double his fortune for him. But Magnin, in revenge, uses it to ruin Jimmy. Thereupon the latter, face to face with poverty, decides to be the man of the house, and he rouses Chadyeane's admiration by his domineering manner. So they wind up in a humble bungalow, poor but happy, and Jimmy finds it possible to thank Magnin for ruining him.
